PROUD DAY FOR RURAL COUNCIL

LORD ANCASTER PRESENTS COAT OF ARMS

YESTERDAY (Thursday) was a proud day for the Rural District Council, during the afternoon the Earl of Ancaster presented the Council's new coat of arms designed by Sir John Forester, R.A., J.P. with his pewter and chain of office. The ceremony took place in a marriage at the Council's offices in London Road before members and officials of the Council and guests, as well as spectators who had assembled to watch the proceedings. The Earl of Ancaster, who has been a member of the Council for many years, presented the new coat of arms to the Council in a formal ceremony. The coat of arms features the traditional symbols of agriculture and rural life, including a plow, wheat sheaf, and pastoral scenes. The ceremony was attended by many members of the Council and other guests who had gathered to witness the presentation of the new coat of arms. The Earl of Ancaster made a speech expressing his congratulations to the Council and their dedication to the rural community. The new coat of arms will be displayed on the Council's official documents and will serve as a symbol of the Council's commitment to the rural community. The ceremony was a resounding success and the Council members were delighted with the new coat of arms. The Earl of Ancaster was presented with flowers and a plaque in recognition of his contribution to the Council and the rural community. The ceremony was a joyous occasion for all those present and the new coat of arms will serve as a lasting symbol of the Council's dedication to the rural community.

SYNDICATE SPEAKER'S CONCERN AT 'MORAL DECLINE'

CONCERN at the 'moral decline' in this country was expressed by one of the speakers at last Thursday's Methodist Synod at Boston, the first such meeting which was reported in our last issue. The Rev. B. Snowden, of Grimsby, said the cause of the moral decline was to be found in the breakdown of discipline and in the weakening of the family.
